Biographical Information:

Jason McAfee, Ph.D., is a senior lecturer of chemistry at the University of Texas at Dallas. Jason received his professional training throughout the state of Texas. He earned his B.S. degree in Chemistry from Tarleton State University, his M.S. in Physics from Texas Tech University and a Ph.D. in Chemistry from Texas Tech University. He has worked as a post-doctoral scholar at the University of North Texas, a full-time professor of chemistry and physics at Howard County College, and an adjunct professor at Tarrant County College, Navarro County College, and the University of Texas at Arlington. Jason has been an invited judge for several ACS Meetings-in-Miniature. Since becoming employed full-time, Jason has attended all of the Fall National ACS Meetings, and looks forward to attending more in the future. He has attended these meetings to develop research ideas and to improve his ability as a chemistry lecturer. As a Councilor, Jason desires to become involved in the governance of the Society at the national level by representing the ideals and goals of the local section.
